

I Have A Dream Too

Tiny home lifestyle has been a vision of mine for quite some time. It seems the time is now.

I have been doing lots of research and planning and brainstorming. Im looking for land somewhere around Luling, Martindale or Wimberly, basically within 100 miles of Austin and my family. I would like to be as close to the water as possible even if i have to build on stilts. How convenient that the people who can help me along in my endeavor are right where I want to be.

I have many reasons for wanting to build my tiny home. I am sick of the rat race living in Austin. I pay $600 bucks a month in property taxes for the privilege of living in a home I own. I would rather spend my days making art, gardening and being with friends and family. I have a fine arts degree and am very creative. I am mechanically intuitive and am very good with my hands (I just so happen to be a massage therapist). I am a good listener, fast learner and a team player. I have a sharp mind and always looking for new ways to go about things. I my goal is to create a life that is healthy, happy and sustainable.

I have lived on tiny islands where modern conveniences were not the norm (my water supply was a cistern collected of my roof). I lived on a ship in a tiny room that I shared with two other people. I don't have any concerns about whether or not I can adapt to tiny home living. It's what I want, to get back to the basics. Simplify things and focus on what really matters. I know I would fit right in with you folks at Pure Salvage Living because for the last few years I have been creating various functional art pieces out of trash. I am fit and generally good with tools but I definitely could use a little direction in structural building basics. I have been working on a floor plan of my dream home.....it changes daily. I do want to incorporate rainwater collection and solar power in my plan as well as the use of the absolute least amount possible of toxic building materials.

I have been steadily working towards my goal. I've done major downsizing but still have a long way to go, but it feels freeing and gets easier every day. The toughest things to part with are art, music, photos and gardening stuff. I put my house up on the market so theres no turning back now. I have spent the last 20 years focused on raising my children. Now its time I get to focus on what I personally, as an individual, want to do with my life today.

LEARN, CREATE, EVOLVE AND BE HAPPY.

Be a positive footprint on this mother earth, she's the only one we have.
